There's another way that blogging makes my writing better: writing every day makes it easier to write every day. When I was a baby writer, I thought the injunction to "write every day" was purely aspirational, like "do an hour's aerobic exercise" or "eat five helpings of vegetables." I deeply regret the years in which I waited for inspiration to strike before writing (as I regret the years when I didn't get adequate exercise or nutrition) because of all the practice I missed and the habits I waited too long to develop.
